Night at the Museum II: Escape from the Smithsonian

May 23, 2008

A scene from the upcoming film Night at the Museum II: Escape from the Smithsonian? No, it's from our own Meet Me At Midnight.

You heard it here first at Eye Level. The sequel to the wildly successful Ben Stiller movie is being filmed in Washington D.C., even as we speak (somebody twitter Ben Stiller!) This time, the Smithsonian takes center stage. We got close to some of the action on Saturday when the outside of our museum was being filmed. We got as near as we could, waving our Smithsonian badges.

Unfortunately on this particular day, the film crew was only shooting the

Typewritten Walker Identity

Category: Junk Drawer

Date: May 23, 12:44 pm

In light of the Typewriter Typefaces post back in March, a co-worker of ours was kind enough to bring in a Royal typewriter to the Walker studio. Everyone had fun punching away at the keys and writing some very profound statements. Inevitably, the fun and experimentation led me to what you see below: typewriter-made spin-offs [...]

The Walker Conquers Cannes

Date: May 23, 10:30 pm

Cannes, France— Halfway through the Cannes Film Festival, which wraps up this weekend with the revelation of the Palme d'Or and other awards, two absurdly fortunate and extremely busy cineastes from Minneapolis somehow manage via phone, text, e-mail, and various psychic fax messages to schedule one those "What've you liked so far?" chats. (Don't worry: [...])

Visit to Sudley House

Isobel at Sudley House

We've had Isobel Hyde-Walker from Calderstones School working with us in the Press and Marketing office for the last 2 weeks. Isobel went on a visit to Sudley House to check out the recent renovations, here's what she thought of it:

'Situated in an expanse of picturesque grounds Sudley House is an interesting, historic place full of intriguing paintings and furnishings. For a year now it has been re-opened to the public, following a period of restoration. So today I visited the house to discover whether any changes made have been successful or yet another modernisation of a historic building, ruining its original features.

Although the entrance pathway has been widened to make way for coaches and tourists I feel it makes little difference when the grounds are so elegant, on this sunny day they look beautiful and it is very tempting to spend my day strolling through the gardens!

Sudley House tells a story of Liverpool's history and the Holt family. Featured on the televisions standing on the ground floor rooms are stories told by Mr Holt, Emily Holt and their maid. The tale starts with Mr Holt, a wealthy man whose business was in ships and Liverpool's bustling harbour. This man bought the house which was then passed onto his daughter after he died. When Emma, the daughter, died she left the house to the people of Liverpool.

One update that surprised me was the new lift. It seems misplaced amongst the wooden furnishings and delicate paintings. However after an explanation it does seem necessary for enabling those with disabilities to visit the House.

On the first floor were several exhibitions, all different and appealing to a range of interests. What was particularly special to me was the competition exhibit, in which entrants had to make an arts/crafts piece inspired by something in the house. It was obvious that a lot of thought had gone into the pieces the all seemed to be different and winners in their own right. The winning piece was extraordinary: a stained glass window standing in a window capturing the sun magnificently and glowing in an array of bright colours.

It is somewhat impressive the number of paintings Mr Holt had in his collection and furthermore that they are still Happy Tuesday!

So it's Tuesday! Right now Laura is leading My First Book Club and I'm avoiding cleaning off my desk. This Saturday was so fun! There was finger painting, a very wet science and a small orchestra!

May 23, 2008

We couldn't resist adding some staff snaps of the Getty goats. Here you can see that after a hard day of mowing hillside greenery, they are eager for their photo opp.

Neue Tagebücher in der Ausstellung

Die ersten Leihgaben haben sich aus der Ausstellung verabschiedet: Das "Blumentagebuch" der Clara Schumann und ein Tagebuch von Johann Wolfgang Goethe sind zurück an die Leihgeber gegangen. Doch schon in den nächsten Stationen in Nürnberg und Berlin wird man ihnen wieder begegnen können. Als Ersatz finden sich nun ein Tagebuchfragment mit Miniaturschrift von Robert Walser und ein weiteres Tagebuch von Johann Wolfgang Goethe in den Vitrinen.
